

Moral Injury & Killing in Combat: Research & Clinical Implications

OCTOBER 30, 2019 | 11 a.m. ET

About this Webinar

This presentation will begin by defining moral injury and describing a theoretical model that highlights some of the key aspects of moral injury. Killing in war will be described as one example of a potentially morally injurious event that can cause mental health and functional difficulties. Differences between killing trauma and PTSD-related trauma will be described as well as the differences between moral injury and PTSD. In this context, the relationship between survivor's guilt and moral injury will be discussed. Assessment and treatment of moral injury will briefly be described. Finally, future potential directions in moral injury research will be highlighted.

Learning Objectives:

- Define moral injury and describe its mental health and functional impact.
- Explain the differences between moral injury and PTSD.
- Summarize a causal framework for moral injury.
- Describe the relationship between moral injury and survivor's guilt.
